VotH Petrarch's Horace Carolingian Minuscule (v1.1) February 2026

The font is inspired by the Latin Carolingian minuscule hand used in the 12th-century CE Codex Laurentianus Pluteus 34.1, also known as Petrarch's Horace, one of the oldest surviving manuscripts of the Roman poet Horace's works, which was famously once owned by the Italian Renaissance poet Francis Petrarch, thus giving the manuscript its informal name.

The manuscript is currently held by Florence's Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana (BML) and can be viewed online via BML's digitized facsimile at the following link:

Be sure "Contextual Alternates" and/or "Ligatures" are activated in your application for full font functionality.

Alternate characters are mapped to standard Unicode characters that have a similar appearance to the character in question. This allows text composed for use with the VotH Petrarch's Horace Carolingian Minuscule font to still be rendered and legible in a font such as Times New Roman. For example, the alternate Latin Capital H included in the font is mapped to the Unicode standard Cyrillic Capital Letter En, as this character has the same appearance as a Latin Capital H.

The manuscript the font is based upon contains extensive scholia (explanatory notes) written within the manuscript's generous margins, which are each tied to the main text via a reference mark, known as a signe de renvoi.

These reference marks take the form of majuscule letters and symbols accompanied by dots, or simply a series of dots.

Roman Numerals

The font supports the automatic conversion of strings of Arabic numbers into Roman numerals. (Range 1 to 3999)
Example: Typing 1347 will automatically render as mcccxlvii

Alternatively, Roman numeral strings can be constructed manually using the U-217x range of the Unicode Number Forms block.
